To whom it may concern:

I have known Christopher Angello for roughly 4 years. I met Chris when he walked into my office on a cold call. Typically, I would not take the time to speak with a sales person that did not make an appointment. However, Chris did get my attention and before I knew it he had scheduled an appointment to come back to speak to me about my Office Equipment needs. Since meeting Chris we have established a business relationship that I truly value. His product knowledge combined with his professionalism during the sales process is what convinced me to purchase my first piece of equipment from him. The service, support and reliability that I received from him after the sale is what made purchasing 2 additional units from him an easy decision.

Chris Angello is the type of individual that any organization would be lucky to call an employee. His personality, drive, determination and work ethic make him an asset to any organization. Chris conveys a genuine and sincere interest to his clients regarding their business and success. It is a pleasure doing business with an individual that you know is going to be with you for the long haul rather than making the sale and disappearing. I do not consider Chris a Salesperson. Rather I view him as a resource and a consultant.

Since meeting Chris I have also had the pleasure to get to know him on a personal level. Chris is a dedicated family man. He has one of the strongest characters and moral foundations of anyone I have ever met. Chris is the type of individual that will succeed in whatever he does. My only regret is that I cannot afford to hire him myself.

Sincerely,

David J. Manley
